country towns into the city and back, selling the railroad tickets and tickets to his show at the same time. These excursions became so popular that he developed his system greatly, sold out his panorama and organized excursion tours to New York, Washington, the White Mountains and other places. He may justly be called the father of the cheap excursion system. He became interested in the general project for a Pacific railroad at an early day. In 1869 Perham obtained from the Maine legislature a charter for the People's Pacific Railroad company, and organized the company in charter for the People's Pacific Railroad company, and organized the company in Boston. The uneasy feeling in wall street continues to increase, and business grows more and more dull. The average daily transactions were again on the decrease last week, and although the general tone of the market looked steady, several specialties were very roughly handled. The Villard stocks, the Chion Pacific, and the Northwester, the County of the Northwester, the Northwester, the County of the Northwester, the Northwest the Northwestern were conspicuous among them. The two last-named stocks had special reasons for showing a de-cline, and in the case of the Northwestern at least the fall is only temporary, the Villard stocks merely resumed natural downward course, which was slackened for a moment by the issue of the new mortgage. Now that the bonds are taken up by the creditors of that illfatod concern, the stock held by them up till now must be sold, and last week's drop in the price will probably go on with JEFF OF THE CHOP HOUSE Northern Pacific company. Perham's plan was to have his company adopted by congress as the one to build the road to San Francisco, and, failing in this, he fell back upon the Northern route, of which he became an ardent advocate after the passage of the Union Pacific bill in 1862.

They have succeeded better than anybody could have anticipated. But there is nothing surprising in it to any one who knows the profundity of the Germind."

The Sample Copy Fiend.

Recently it seems to us as though large number of people throughout this country have nothing to do but to write postal cards to newspaper publishers, ask-ing for a sample copy of their paper. This is a new and growing industry. Bill This is a new and growing industry. Bill Nye expresses the sentiments of a good many long suffering men where he says: It costs only one cent to get a sample copy, and at that rate the average bore of this denomination expects to get a $3 weekly one year for 25 cents. Of course the sample copy free lunch fiend has to write each week and sign a different name, but that don't injure his feelings any. He has nothing else to do, and it keeps him from ennui. Perhaps these people think we are publishing a paper just to wear out our young life; but that is where they fall into a common error. We are trying to acquire a competence, so that we can carry a summer cane with our monocan carry a summer cane with our mono gram on it, and that is why we ask for things sometimes when it seems unladylike and eccentric.

The man who gets literature by spong-ing sample copies is generally a man who obtains a precarious livelihood by posing as an artist's model of a wild eye snide. People who enclose stamps will be waited upon just as soon as the mail-ing brigade can catch up a little; but those who enclose a chunk of taffy in a postal card and look for this priceless repository of electrotyped brain, will anz-iously watch through the gloaming till a late hour—but will wait in vain.
